RESIDENCE IN CALIFORNIA SINCE

December, 1852 Los Angeles, 1874 (Please make this as full as possible, giving business affiliations, positions of honor or trust with dates if possible.)

Edward Falles Spence was born December 22, 1832 in the North of Ireland. He was educated by private tutors. His practical knowledge of business affairs was gained by assisting his father who had large farming tracts and herds of cattle, and in addition, was a local official in that part of Ireland,

At twenty years of age Mr. Spence emigrated to America. After working on a farm near Philadelphia for a few months he shipped for California via the Nicaragua route, and arrived in San Francisco in December of 1852.

He did not come to Los Angeles or Southern California for about twenty years. The intervening time he passed in Northern California and Nevada. In the latter place he engaged in mining and wherever he lived he participated in public affairs.

In San Jose, California, where Mr. Spence controlled an extensive drug business he became largely interested in the San Jose Savings Bank. Upon going to San Diego in 1872 he continued in banking to the exclusion of other businesses, and became one of the organizers of the Commercial Bank of San Diego.

When J.E. Hallenbeck and associates organized the Commercial Bank of Los Angeles in 1875 Mr.

Spence was chosen its cashier. This bank was reorganized in 1880 as the Commercial State Bank, the forerunner of the First National Bank of Los Angeles, of which Mr. Spence became president in 1881.

les, of which Mr. Spence became president in 1881.

During these active years of Mr. Spence's life he served concurrently as president of three banks, vice-president and stockholder, and director of many others. He also engaged in other financial and real estate enterprises. He was a heavy helder of realty in the Whittier and Monrovia districts, though he remained preeminently a banker.

A public spirited man he was prominent in current public life. He was Republican and liberal, and contributed generous sums of cash and real property toward public beneficence.

Final Rites Held For Anna M. Spence, Ex-Mayor's Widow

Funeral services for Mrs. Anna M. Spence, 86, widow of E. F. Spence, former mayor of Los Angeles, were conducted today at her home, 118 South Primrose avenue. Services were to be performed by Canon E. B. Smith.

Her husband was mayor of Los Angeles in 1885-86, as well as one of the founders of Monrovia and of the University of Southern California.

She is survived by two sons, W. Glenn Spence and George E. Spence, both of Monrovia.

with Mrs. Spence he was a leader in society at that time. He was one of the projectors of the first Protestant institution of higher learning in Southern California, then called Methodist College. Mr. Spence remained a director on its board for a number of years. His vision and money went into other public improvements, such as building the first horse car across the river, and, in 1886, promoting and financing the first electric line in Los Angeles.

As a city official Mr. Spence was said to be both efficient and popular. While on the City Council he served as its president, and as mayor (1884-1886) he inaugrated a number of financial systems still in use. It was he who organized the fire and police departments, putting all employees under salary.

In his last year as mayor the last zanja or open water ditch was abolished. This was the year in which the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads climaxed their long contest for supremacy by opening a rate war. Round trips from points west of Missouri to Southern California could be made by rail for as low as fifteen dollars. The result of this private railroad war was the great boom of 1887-88, during which thousands of permanent settlers arrived daily in the city.

In the last years of his life Mr. Spence's activities were curtailed due to ill health. He died September 19, 1892, in Monrovia.
