

Occidental College

7-6-75

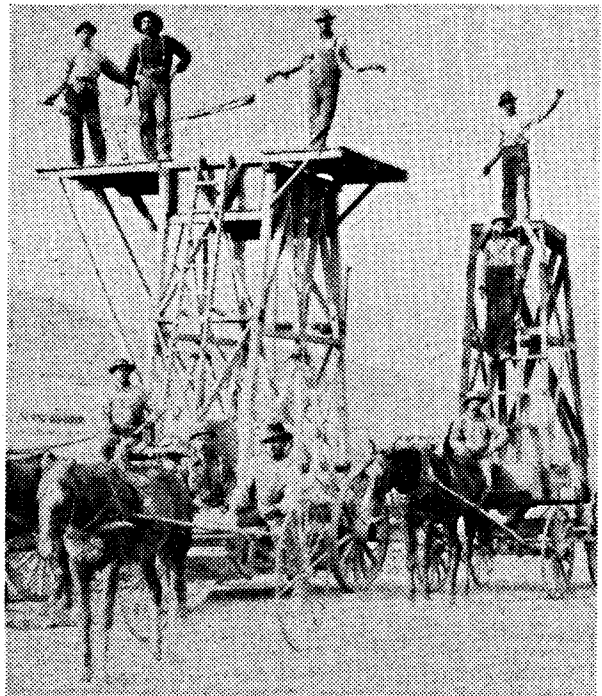

The metal skeleton of Occidental College is rising on Alumni Ave. in Eagle Rock in this 1913 picture. Oxy was already a respected name in the Northeast, having settled originally in East Los Angeles. The school later moved to Avenue 50 and Pasadena Avenue where a visitor was President Theodore Roosevelt.

Meat wagon

7-6-75

Freshly dressed sides of beef are carried into a North Broadway market from a horse drawn wagon in this 1905 photo. Lincoln Heights was a favored home for the city's elite who built magnificent homes and traded on busy and prospering North Broadway.

Lay tracks

7-6-75

Burly roustabouts strike an arrogant pose during the laying of Los Angeles and Pacific tracks during the 1890s in Highland Park. The area was already known as a desirable suburb of Los Angeles and attracted families seeking contentment and culture.